

The Isar in Munich during summertime

The Isar is a river in Tirol, Austria and Bavaria, Germany. It enters Germany near Mittenwald and flows through Bad Tölz and Munich. At 295km in length, it is the fourth largest river in Bavaria. Almost every german family goes to the river once a year as it preserves many activities to do.

In Munich surfing has been one of the most common activities taking place in the river. However there are also others who prefer to take a bath or just sun themselves. The Isar is a very calm and safe place and therefore can be used by old and young people. It is therefore a wonderful place where people can spend their time in summer and enjoy themselves.
